

Urgent Care Centers

Urgent care clinics provide treatment for minor illnesses or injuries that do not require hospitalization but need direct attention. Patients with life-threatening injuries, accidental poisonings, behavioral health or chemical dependency issues, or those who might be victims of a crime (such as an assault) should be seen in a hospital emergency department. If you're experiencing a life-threatening injury or illness at any time, call 911 immediately or visit the nearest hospital emergency room.

Major Medical Centers (24/7 with Emergency Room services)

Medical centers are conglomerations of health-care facilities including hospitals and research facilities that also either include or are closely affiliated with a medical school. Although the term medical center is sometimes used to refer to any concentration of health-care providers including local clinics and individual hospital buildings the term is more properly used to refer to larger facilities or groupings of facilities that include a full spectrum of health services, medical education and medical research.

The major medical centers represent the crown jewels of health care in the United States. They vary greatly in their organization, the services they provide, and their ownership and operation.
